

① Listen to a math teacher talking to her class.

I am going to give everyone extra time to study for this test. I have given everyone extra work from the student book. I want you all to spend the rest of class doing the work and asking as many questions as you can think of. The test is next Monday and you will need to do a lot of work to be ready.

② Listen to a museum volunteer talking to a group of students.

In this display, you'll see some antique jewelry. These necklaces, earrings, and bracelets were worn by very wealthy people in Europe during the 1600s. You can see that jewelry hasn't changed that much, even though it is old. It's made of gold, diamonds, and sapphires, just like today's jewelry.

③ Listen to an art teacher talking to his class.

This is my favorite painting. When I was a kid, I loved mixing colors together. I have painted a lot of stuff since I was a kid, but this is still my favorite. It is simple and was easy to do but I could never try it again. Sometimes children can create beautiful things without even knowing what they are doing.

④ Listen to a school teacher talking to students.

I am sorry about the food last week. We had never tried cooking that kind of pasta before. This week, we are going to make pasta again so I promise it will be different. I want you to be happy and to like the food. I wouldn't want you to be hungry in the cafeteria.